It's Never Too Late to File a Tax Return, Tax Resolution Professionals and the IRS Agree

While the IRS recently offered tips on how to pay tax debt off in full, a tax professional looks for the most cost-effective solution.

Encino, CA—The IRS, looking to collect every cent of taxes owed, last week published an advisory list of ten tips for taxpayers who owe back taxes or have other tax debt. Among the advice: get a loan to pay the back-tax debt in full; pay the tax debt off with a credit card, as the interest charged might be less than the accruing IRS penalties and interest; pay through electronic funds transfer; or consider changing your W-4 Employee's Withholding allowance to pay down the tax debt.

All involve paying back the full amount owed, which might be cold comfort for those consumers who, for any number of reasons, failed to file due to an inability to pay their taxes and are not in any position to adhere to any of the IRS's suggestions.

Tax resolution professionals, however, say that the IRS has a point about filing. But there is a big caveat, says Michael Rozbruch, founder and CEO of Tax Resolution Services, Co., the nation's leading experts in tax negotiation and mediation®. "If you have unfiled tax returns or owe the IRS back taxes, it's important to figure out what your best IRS tax relief options are."

Hiring a Certified Tax Resolution Specialist or tax attorney specializing in tax indebtedness issues can be a prudent move, particularly in educating the consumer about one's rights and options. The IRS offers different programs, such as Partial Pay Installment Agreements (PPIAs) which are regular payments over a set time, and Offers in Compromise (OIC), both of which can significantly reduce the total amount owed, for those who qualify.

Wading through this sea of regulations, rules, protocol and paperwork, however, can be daunting for most taxpayers. Tax professionals who can analyze an individual's back-tax issues and help advocate a resolution with the IRS can significantly reduce a consumer's tax burden. "There is a solution to every problem," Rozbruch says. "The right tax resolution professional can find that solution while helping ensure you don't pay a penny more than you have to."
